How Green Can One Company Get?

Brighton, Colorado—Every morning, Lily rises with the sun, does her morning yoga and walk, and then heads out to work on her farm. Lily is the founder and formulator of Lily Organics skincare products, and believes that respecting and honoring Mother Earth begins at her company's own U.S.D.A. Certified organic farm, where she grows her own chemical-free, no-Synthetic-added ingredients for her purely botanical skincare line. The ingredients are then walked to her FDA inspected lab at the farm, where they are then hand crafted in small batches each week, and shipped straight to the retailer or customer.

Lily strives to leave the smallest carbon footprint on Mother Earth. Her company does this, by growing its own organic ingredients, packing products in glass, hand crafting all products fresh on premises, mailing in pre-used cartons and to produce little waste. "We have been creating organic products, fresh every week, for two and a half decades," states Lily with peaceful satisfaction.

Lily's lifestyle truly demonstrates that Earth Day can be everyday. Even as a CEO of a company for the past 25 years, she lives in a modest 900 square foot farm house, and jokes that her "company car" is a 1991 Toyota Camry. Lily's way of life and passion for the earth demonstrates that a company can be green straight through to its heart and soul.

A seventh generation American grower Lily is passionate about doing her part to help keep the earth beautiful, and to keep agriculture sustainable for future generations. This Earth Day, she plans to plant 50 Lilacs to help cleanse the air and create beauty, organically!
