Tidbits: A seventh-generation American grower, Lily Morgan gained her extensive knowledge of natural skin care the hard way. As a teen with severe acne, Morgan started mixing her own lotions and creams when her parents couldn't afford the prescriptions her dermatologist wrote her.

"Instead I would go look at all the ingredients on the bottles and think, 'What is it that makes this product work?' I realized there were a lot of synthetic chemicals, which I'll never use, so I turned to botanicals as a process of elimination," Morgan said.

Morgan became so adept at creating natural and effective skin-care products that she decided to share her toners, moisturizers, treatments and masks and start Lily Organics. These days, Morgan's is the only skin-care company in Colorado to be designated as a certified organic grower. Morgan's "Seed to Shelf" commitment means she grows all her botanicals and handcrafts her products to ensure their quality.

"We grow chamomile, calendula, lavender, rosemary, comfrey and yarrow, to name a few, and we make the products up fresh every week with bid-available ingredients that actually improve the molecular structure of your skin," Morgan said. "All of the products are 100 percent guaranteed."
